Kosovo confirms first coronavirus cases, an Italian and a Kosovar

1 MIN READ

PRISTINA (Reuters) - Kosovo reported its first coronavirus cases on Friday, in a 20-year-old Italian woman and a 77-year-old Kosovar man.

“Their condition is stable,” Health Minister Arben Vitia said. “We are identifying others that were in contact with the two patients and they are being isolated.”

Local media said the 20-year-old Italian woman was working for a humanitarian organization, while the man had also arrived from Italy in the past few days.
